Institution description

Gesundheitsforen Leipzig GmbH is a German healthcare research, analytics and consulting company based in Leipzig. The company supports stakeholders across the healthcare sector, including statutory and private health insurers, pharmaceutical and medical technology companies, healthcare providers and research partners.

A particular focus is on real-world data (RWD) analyses, health services research, epidemiology, health economics and outcomes research. Gesundheitsforen Leipzig conducts observational studies and analyses using routinely collected healthcare data to investigate disease epidemiology, treatment patterns, patient journeys, healthcare utilisation, outcomes and costs.

The company operates the German Analysis Database for Evaluation and Health Services Research (DADB), an anonymised claims database based on data from German statutory health insurance funds. The database enables longitudinal analyses of healthcare delivery and supports the generation of real-world evidence for scientific, regulatory, market access and health policy-related research questions.

Research projects are conducted by interdisciplinary teams with expertise in medicine, pharmacy, epidemiology, health economics, statistics, mathematics, data science and health services research. Gesundheitsforen Leipzig collaborates with stakeholders from academia, healthcare, industry and the German statutory health insurance system and supports the dissemination of research findings through scientific publications and conference contributions.
